The Shenzhen Reform and Opening Up Exhibition Hall is a new window for the international display of the achievements of reform and opening up established by China to commemorate its 40th anniversary. It is one of the top ten cultural construction facilities in Shenzhen in the new era.

As one of the project leads, I was responsible for conceptual creation and the narrative structure of the design deliverables during the bidding process, organizing the team, managing schedules, and ensuring the final output met quality standards.

Spatial strategy

From Fishing Village to Global Innovation Hub

Shenzhen's transformation over the past four decades is a story of resilience and ambition. Once a quiet southern fishing village, it has evolved into a global center for creativity and innovation. This journey mirrors the Chinese cultural metaphor of jade—formed through hardship and refinement—symbolizing the nation's enduring spirit of perseverance and progress.

An Architectural Metaphor of Reform and Nature

The Reform and Opening-Up Exhibition Hall sits at the heart of Shenzhen's planned urban green axis, conceived as an organic composition of landscape, flowing terrain, and a suspended "raw jade" form. Elevated above the ground, the structure maximizes public space and creates a green corridor through the dense urban fabric. Its spatial narrative unfolds through a spiraling DNA-like path, connecting exhibition zones, archives, and public amenities into a unified experience. The ascending ramp—symbolizing the road of reform—guides visitors through layered galleries, culminating in panoramic views of the city.

A Journey Toward Harmony and Immersion

The design integrates ecological pathways and elevated viewing platforms, weaving nature into the visitor experience. At the highest point, the "Road of Reform" and "Road of Ecology" converge, reflecting a vision of balance between progress and sustainability. Flexible exhibition spaces accommodate permanent and temporary displays, offering immersive and interactive encounters. More than a museum, this landmark stands as a cultural monument—celebrating the bold trajectory of reform while embracing the harmony of people, nature, and tradition.

Retrospective

HENEX Method Recipe

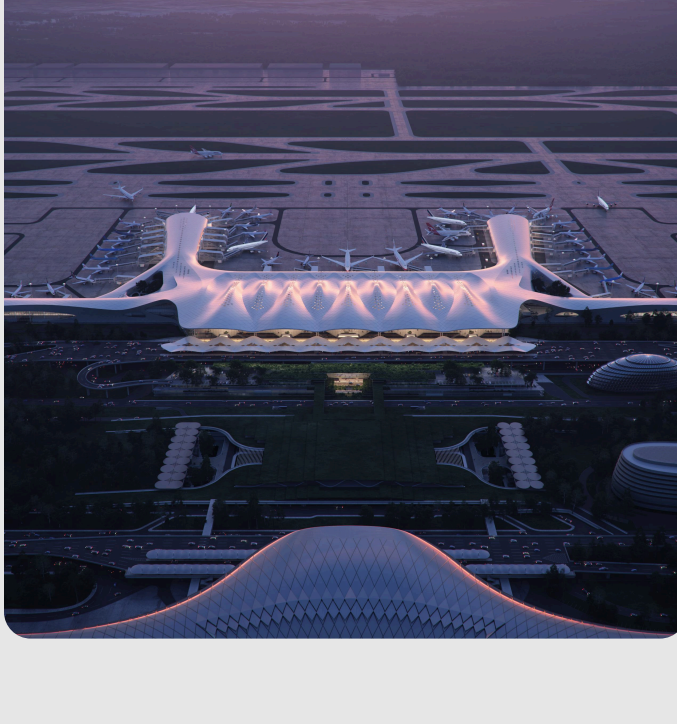

Aim: Craft a commemorative museum—historical depth, multi-voice storytelling, and legible visitor journeys.

Methods (short mapping):

- Purpose Story Script — A coherent spine for the 40-year reform narrative.
- Multiple Viewpoint Story — Parallel perspectives across themes and exhibits.
- Mission-First Navigation — Exhibition IA from theme → chapter → exhibit → interaction.
- Step-by-Step Path Design — Visitor route pace and dwell points made clear.
- Atmosphere Palette — Materials/light balancing memorial tone with openness.
- Clarity & Accessibility Audit — Readable texts, wayfinding, and accessible interactives.

Result: Competition finalist (Second Prize) with a clear narrative + visitor-friendly experience that meets quality standards.
